

A Web Content Rx White Paper

WebContentRx LLC

167 Forge Road
Coventry, CT
860. 502.7735
WebContentRx.biz

Meet People, Have a Social Life, and Maintain Your Privacy

*By Wayne English
President*

Contents

Use A Free E-Mail Account	2
Use A Cheap Untraceable Cell Phone	3
About the Author.	4

Introduction

Having an active social life means, for single people, being able to date those folks that you may not know real well. Trouble is, how do you do that without revealing your phone number and main email address?

So, just how do you hide in plain site?

Read on, we've got a solution for you.

Protecting your identity from the people you meet while allowing them to easily communicate with you seems like a contradiction in terms. But it's necessity if you're going to date and have an active personal life. Remaining reachable is easy, to do so while maintaining your privacy - literally by hiding in plain sight - is harder, but not impossible. Privacy and personal safety go hand-in-hand, so the question becomes, "How do you give people contact information without being tracked down?"

If you're wondering why you would want to give your contact information to strangers; well there are several reasons. You date, go to parties, attend weddings, and meet people that you want to see again. You buy and sell things. You may want to sell your car, buy a car, sell textbooks, or other things that require you to contact people, and for them to contact you.

Do you want to give your contact information to these people? To someone you just met, or to someone who is no more than a voice on the phone? No, of course not. Using the techniques in this article you no longer have to reveal your phone number or mail e-mail address.

Use A Free E-Mail Account

To acquire and maintain a totally separate and private e-mail account you will use a free e-mail provider like Gmail, Yahoo, or Hot Mail. To create your account is a matter of a minute or two. These free accounts are fantastic. You can use them for anything you care to, and still keep your main email address to yourself.

Also, by using free email you further hide yourself because you are not using a local Internet Service Provider. No one can say, "Well, she uses such and such for her email so she must live in this or that town." No, with a national provider like those mentioned above, you could be anywhere on the planet.

Now when you meet someone that you want to see again, give that person your free e-mail address. You can now easily be emailed. But what about your cell phone? Read on, we've got a solution for that, too.

Use An Inexpensive Untraceable Cell Phone

You can obtain an inexpensive prepaid cell phone. How inexpensive? Ten dollars; plus a few bucks for air time, and you have a secondary telephone that protects your from giving out your primary phone number. This works great. Though inexpensive, these phones come with an impressive list of features. Chief among them is voice mail. So, when your new friend calls he or she can simply leave you a message. When you get around to answering your voice mail, you call back - on your inexpensive phone, of course.

For additional security, when you buy your cell phone, pay for it in cash. Don't use a credit card. And, there is no need for you to carry this phone around with you everywhere. No need at all. Leave it home, and check it whenever you want. Its got voice mail after all.

Should you choose not get back to someone, so what? There's no way to trace you. Even if someone has the means to run down your cell phone number, you paid for in cash.

Stay safe behind an untraceable email address and an untraceable cell phone. Be well, and enjoy your social life.

About the Author

Wayne English is a published author of three books, a writer with local, national, and international publications in print and online. See WebContentRx.biz. An accomplished speaker, Wayne lectures on writing for the Web and social networking.